

Is Freelance Writing the Right Career for You?: This 10-Question Assessment Test Will Tell You

Im a serial entrepreneur, and let me tell ya, there are some businesses I never would have started had I gotten some detailed insight beforehand. This is what this test does. Answer honestly because being real with yourself in business indeed, in life will keep you from making a whole lot of mistakes. Believe me when I say, its better to know before you start a business that its not for you, than spend precious time and money trying to make it work when in fact its something you never should have started in the first place. Ive done this on two or three occasions, because I lied to myself and said, I can do that, or I will do that consistently, when it went against who I naturally was as a person. THESE are the type of lies that will get you in trouble and that you are forced to examine because of this test. It just saves you so much time, money and stress! What If I Discover That Freelance Writing Is Not My Cup of Tea? Dont worry if this career isnt for you. If youre determined to be an entrepreneur, youll find your business. Just look at this as part of the hunt and keep searching until you find something thats a fit for you. The Joys of Being a Freelance Writer With the above being said, if you decide that freelance writing is for you, boy, are you in for a ride! Its one of the most fun, exciting home-based careers around. Because of my vocation, I can: Work from anywhere -- Ive split my time between the USA and Jamaica (Negril) for years, where I live almost full-time now; Work in my pajamas I do so all the time; so much so in fact that my uniform is whatever I went to bed in the night before; and Fulfill my love of travel Ive worked from such diverse places as a farmhouse in the country in Cordoba, Argentina; a friends kitchen table in Duluth, Minnesota; an internet cafe in New York City; and a hotel room in Stockholm, Sweden. What can I say? I love to be on the go! Depend on a stable income. Why/how? Because when you freelance, you don't just depend on one entity (eg, a job) for your paycheck. You depend on many. So if you lose one client, your whole income doesn't disappear. I've had as many as 20 or 30 clients at one time. While some gave me much more work than others, it still means income stabilization. I don't sweat it when I lose a client for whatever reason because I have others and other lines of income (eg, writing and self-publishing my own ebooks).

*Expand my skill set which keeps me viable in the marketplace. How? As a freelance writer, you learn how to do a lot of stuff! I do everything from update my blogs; to fixing minor, annoying computer errors; to converting files; to creating graphics; to creating and interacting on social media accounts; to writing and selling entire ebooks online. Do you think if I had a job (which usually comes with a set number of duties), that I know even 10% of what I know as a freelance writer? I can tell you without a doubt -- no! I've had client offer me full-time jobs which paid a lot more than I earn as a freelance writer over the years. And it's because I know how to do so much. As a freelancer, you pick up new skills all the time, if you're progressive enough to dive in and do it. So, IF you decide for whatever reason to go back to a full-time job, you'll stand head and shoulders above the competition. I could go on and on about the benefits of being a freelance writer. Hey, I love what I do! But now let's get to the assessment test, so you too can decide if this could be a viable option for you.

That way, the recruiter knows they've made the right call for the company in the long-run. As a result, when answering this question, you'll need to show your your commitment to the company and the goals you've set for your career. .
