Molly Wainwright had never intended to become a mail-order bride, but when she picked up a copy of the Grooms Gazette on a lark, something about one of the advertisements catches her eye. She decides to send away for more information, knowing her heart will never be at peace unless she gives this a chance. Noel Williams has his hands full running the theater that was left to him by his grandmother. He doesn't have time for romance, and would rather do away with the whole process altogether.
