Primary school is an exciting time for both you and your child. Its time for them to socialize, grow more independent, and most importantly, start their education. So why do so many parents feel out of touch and reluctant to ask questions once their child starts school even? Wendy Bray introduces parents to the ins and outs of primary school, the questions you should be asking, how to be an active parent in all areas of school life, and how to monitor your child so you can ensure that your child gets the best start at school. It offers advice on choosing your child's first school, dealing with bullying at infant and junior school, how to help your child with test and exams at a young age, parent evenings and what questions to ask, and getting involved with your child's school.
